

Passed Peak
by Holly Dunlea

The tomato is dressed
in satin,
a ripe red.
She sits
in the window
absorbing strength.
She is ready,
but untouched.
Next to her
fresh flowers,
tended daily,
blossom
in the morning sun.
Once ripe,
she now softens
and succumbs.